

SOUTH CAROLINA NEWS

The Hanham resolution seeking to abridge the pardoning power of the governor has been killed.

The Greenwood Journal quotes Col. W. J. Talbot as saying that he has been elected to the legislature and will not run for the senate.

The house of representatives on last Thursday night by a vote of 56 to 28, ratified the proposed prohibition amendment to the constitution of the United States. The resolution had already been ratified in the senate, and it is practically certain that it will be ratified in joint session.

One hundred cases of coal, rolled into Spartanburg last Friday over the Clinchfield railroad, and Fuel Administration H. E. Greer, who was in the state for the purpose, promptly distributed it to various towns through out the state that were suffering from cold.

Both houses of the general assembly adjourned last Friday until today. This was partly in accord with usual custom during the early days of the session and partly because of the closing down of the printing offices in obedience to the order of the fuel administrator which made it impossible to get bills and journals printed.

John T. Miller, a well known printer of Columbia, who has for years been prominent in the labor circles of the state, died in the early morning of last Friday morning of pneumonia. Mr. Miller had served in the general assembly and at the time of his death was a candidate for one of two vacant seats in the Richmond delegation.

The Fifth District Medical society of South Carolina, composed of Kershaw, Fairfield and York counties, held its annual meeting in Lancaster last Friday morning. It is said to be the largest of the most interesting and profitable made in the history of the association. The meeting was held in the Masonic hall and the following programme was carried out: "The good derived from medical societies," Dr. E. H. McLeod of Florence, president of the society, presided.
